How to judge the right CMS solution?

by Mark Wilston

Article published on March 7th 2012 | Web Design

In the present day, developing a strong web application is almost a necessity. It is no longer enough to get the static HTML based web pages, but the website has to offer cutting edge and highly modernized features to the internet users. When it comes to the features and attributes, we not only mean the design aspect of the website. It must have various interesting and engrossing features in its design.

Content management systems - making the websites feature rich and powerful

In order to get the right website for your project, it is important that you use the right CMS design. There are various open source CMS available who solve a particular function. WordPress is simple to use and highly web effective, Joomla development helps in developing complex community based websites and Drupal is the CMS of choice for developing large scale extensible websites.

Knowing which CMS design to opt for?

When it comes to judging which CMS solution is best for the website, the choice is more like a kid being in the toys shop and having to choose just a single toy. You kind of want all the features, but as the wise man says, one can not have it all.

In this article, we outline the 3 basic considerations one must keep in mind, before finalizing the choice of CMS. Have a look to know more.

1. Understand your own requirements - Before you even began with the entire CMS development process, it is important that you just sit down and list down your own requirements. This process will require you to be aware of the various websites and web designs on the internet. You may want one feature, say social networking, and you may not want another, lets say ecommerce development. At this stage, only list down all the features that you wish to have in your website.

2. Know your own technical expertise - How much comfortable are you around the technology? Are you fascinated by the new and advanced technology or you kind of just wish to stick to the basics and do not wish to make a great deal out of the same? Besides, who will run the website? Is your staff has to run the website, are they trained or not? The understanding of the same will have a great deal of impact on the choice that you take. For instance, if you are an expert yourself, there is nothing stopping you from opting for Drupal, however if you wish to keep it simple yet effective, WordPress development is your answer.

3. Which CMS has the better community support? - all of these open sources has a fan following of their own. There are different categories of excellent CMS designers, differentiated on the basis of the CMS they prefer to work on, for instance Drupal Community, WordPress community, and Joomla community etc. Obviously, it will be a wise decision to go for that CMS web design who has the strongest community of fervent users, so that if any time you have any problems, the solution is just waiting for you, online.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/web-design-articles/how-to-judge-the-right-cms-solution.htm - Article Side

Mark Wilston - About Author:
Pixelcrayons offers best a CMS design & development services & opensource content management system solutions which includes wordpress development, a joomla development, drupal development services at affordable price.

Article Keywords:
cms solution, cms platform, content management system

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!