Driving Through the Streets of Indianapolis, Indiana by Erwin Calverley

Article published on March 27th 2012 | Auto

Indianapolis is a big and sprawling city with wide streets that are heaven for car owners. On a good day, driving with the top down through streets devoid of traffic is an experience worth remembering. Driving through the city itself can give even the local tourist a good time.

Who wouldn't appreciate Indianapolis and its natural and man-made beauties? The dog and nature lovers will well appreciate walking or driving through the various pet-friendly parks in the city like the Broad Ripple Dog Park, the Humane Society of Indianapolis Dog Park, and the Paul Ruster Bark Park. One can park somewhere close and take a brisk walk around these parks and breathe in clean air.

Then there are the various city halls and museums. There's the President Benjamin Harrison Home which used to be the house of the United States' 23rd president. There's also the Morris-Butler House which has been turned into a museum that houses various antique furniture, paintings, and other decorative art pieces. There are also cultural centers where theater groups hold plays and concerts such as the Children's Museum of Indiana, the Indiana State Museum, and the Indiana Medical History Museum. There are also libraries. A short drive through the city's north side will bring one to these well-known tourist attractions.

What makes driving around the city more enjoyable, however, is the knowledge that one is driving a good car. There are Ford dealerships Indianapolis has that sell quality cars. Some dealerships also rent out cars for tourists at reasonable rates. These dealerships also offer car maintenance services at low prices.

In the meantime, if one has enough funds, one can also buy a car like the Ford Escape Indianapolis motorists love that certainly suit the city and its beautiful architecture. This is because this crossover is itself a beauty. The car and the city easily complement each other, and it will never be more easy to navigate through the busy streets and major avenues.

All in all, Indianapolis is a wonderful place to visit. It's not surprising that some drivers simply passing through will even be tempted to get out of their cars and start walking through the city and its countless tourist spots. The prosperity and progress is evident in the luxury cars from Ford in Indianapolis that make their way daily across the busy commercial districts of this city-capital of the State of Indiana.
