A prospect of taking a much desired vacation brings a smile to almost every face. Add to it affordable air tickets and the smile would only get wider!

And it sure is not that difficult to net those cheap flights tickets as it seems. One can get their hands around cheap air tickets by simply knowing about the cheapest days to fly and best time to buy tickets. Here is some information on days to fly and time to buy airline tickets for tourists looking to save some dough.

Cheap Days to Fly

It is commonly considered that the cheapest day for air travel are Tuesdays. The other days that make for cheap travel are Wednesdays and Thursdays. On the other hand, weekends i.e., Fridays through Sundays make for the most costly days for air travel.

Seemingly, the cheapest flight out of London is considered to be the first flight out in the morning. The other best flight options are the ones during or after lunch and at the dinner hours. Yet, the absolute cheapest time to fly is generally considered to be the late night flights.

Undoubtedly, international flight tickets are ascertained differently as compared to the domestic flights as various factors come into play. International airlines generally dash out four or five different travel departure windows with dramatically varying prices, all the way through the year.

Additionally, the pricing of international flight tickets is generally based on the increasing demand trends and the seasonal calendar of four major seasons that are summers, falls, winters and springs. Summer months are usually the busiest time for air travel and therefore the most expensive. On the other hand, air travel in fall months remain comparatively less in demand and cheap airline tickets are often easier to land up with during this period.

While the climatic conditions and weather patterns remain the most important aspects that determine the airline tickets pricing, there are other vital factors too that affect air ticket demands. Seasonal times when families plan holidays and college students plan their gap year vacations are couple of those times when air tickets remain in demand.

Unsurprisingly, it is important for those wanting to grab cheap airline tickets to be mindful of the latest information about airfare changes to ensure getting away from the highest fare slabs and make the most use of cheaper departure dates.

Best Time to Buy Airline Tickets

It is widely considered that the best time to find the bargains on airfares and special offers for discounted flights is Tuesdays at 3pm. The simple logic that makes Tuesday 3 pm, the most suitable time to book cheap airfares is that the airlines turn up with new airfares deals on Monday, which is followed through the airline industry by Tuesdays. However, tourists willing to snap up cheap air tickets must be careful of booking the discounted airfares by Tuesday as most of the special fares are either sold out or pulled off by Thursdays. Conversely, weekends witness the airfares in the highest fare slabs due to extensive travel demands.
