A guide to storage solutions by Mary Porter

Article published on June 20th 2012 | Business

They may not exactly be the centrepiece of your interior design but storage solutions are a vital part of all sorts of buildings. Indeed there is no shortage of products which help you house important supplies. Storage solutions range from simple things like tilt bins to complex units which separate different components and tools securely.

Whether it is in a bedroom in a suburban semi-detached house, a garage or greenhouse or even an office block chances are that somewhere you frequent will have a range of storage solutions. For instance in the home you will have come across chests of drawers and wardrobes in bedrooms for storing clothes not to mention cabinets in the bathroom and kitchen for stockpiling equipment and products.

It may sound obvious but you should remember that the choice of storage solutions depends on the place in question. For instance places of work will have functionality requirements different to domestic properties. The intended application of the unit determines its design. For instance if large numbers of documents need storing safely and securely then filing cabinets are the only viable solutions whereas if patterns and castings need to be moved to workstations easily then plastic stacking containers are the most suitable option.

When it comes to industrial premises there are more options in terms of storage solutions. The humble shelving unit remains as versatile as ever but special cabinets which can be locked are ideal for large and valuable pieces of equipment. Linbins are ideal where large numbers of small components need to be stored somewhere where they are easily accessible. These storage solutions are ideal in workshops and can be fitted to Louvre panels for that extra bit of practicality.

Where can I find a reliable supplier of all sorts of storage solutions?
