

Article Side

Command and Conquer: Leadership as the Ancient Romans Showed It by Alexander Tiedemann

Article published on May 14th 2012 | Business

Let your imagination project to a time when you are a warrior of the Roman Armada preparing for a nearby battle a true Roman soldier. After looking around, your focus suddenly gets caught by the elder but very skillful centurion leading the column. While you follow his lead, you wonder: "Can I be like him?"

For the most part, anyone with the appropriate skills can be a leader. Take note that the centurion probably used to be a normal soldier himself, getting his keep by fighting many battles and staying alive to speak about his feats. A leader serves as a role model for anybody following his/her example, encouraging them with words of wisdom and well-being boosters. As a spearhead, s/he makes sure that the spear pierces all the way through the target.

Respect is one of the primary components of leadership. If people are not following your lead for some reasons, you may want to check on this element before moving on. The soldiers value their superior, the centurion, and trust him to bring them to complete victory.

Julius Caesar may be higher than a centurion, but his string of victories throughout his day earned him the respect of his soldiers. Even when most of his wars had odds piled against him, his tactical skills routed the bigger battalions. In order for you to earn the recognition of the people, you need to prove that you deserve it.

Leadership and management applies to nearly everything in life in school, the workplace, and not to mention at one's house. An executive leadership training program can get you prepared on your quest to be a bona fide leader. The program can show you ways to illustrate that you have what it takes to be a vital asset to the community. If there is an individual who needs to take the initial step into uncharted territory, it needs to be the one leading the column.

Think about the wonderful Roman generals and exactly how they encouraged men to fight for them, as well as for the Empire. Leadership and management goes beyond riding in a rare kind of horse and speaking to the men with a loud voice. The executive leadership development program will definitely help you provide your followers a great reason to follow you.

For more details on how you can become like Julius Caesar, you can go to ExecLeadership.com. It includes practical articles and posts on executive leadership training and ideas on how to become a successful leader in your very own right.

Article Source:

<http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/command-and-conquer-leadership-as-the-ancient-romans-showed-it.htm> - Article Side

Alexander Tiedemann - About Author:

For more details, search a executive leadership training program, a executive leadership development program and a executive leadership training in Google.

Article Keywords:

executive leadership development program, executive leadership training, executive leadership training program

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!