Investing in Data Analysis Training by Mary Porter

Article published on June 27th 2012 | Business

Data analysis training can prove vital for any business that wants to possess the skills to be able to analyse and interpret their own customer and transaction data to use it for targeted marketing purposes. Any company that collects customer data can use this to their own advantage and it can be used to create tailored and specific marketing plans to target specific customer groups. Data analysis training will equip you or your staff with the skills to be able to analyse your customer data effectively and use it in a resourceful way. Data analysis training will teach you accurate data analysis methods to allow you to carry out accurate, reliable and practical analysis.

Any company that carries out regular marketing activities in order to collect consumer data needs to be able to use this data once it has been collected. Investing in data analysis training for your employees will help you to validate your conclusions and use your findings to maximise the return on your marketing campaigns. There are numerous companies that run data analysis courses and these courses are aimed at developing the productivity and commercial impact that data analysts have on their customers. These types of data analysis courses are aimed at both internal and external data analysts who work for one or a number of companies at the same time.

Most data analysis training will involve both practical and theory work and will be very interactive so all participants can share their ideas and thoughts with other course participants. These types of data analysis courses and workshops are aimed at those people who are responsible for undertaking technical data manipulation, reporting and analysis tasks. The data analysis training courses are ideal for marketing analysts, statistical modellers, risk analysts, customer insight analysts and MI analysts. Data analysis courses will equip people with the skills they need to be able to understand patterns in purchasing trends to be able to carry out targeted marketing activities to attract more customers to their business.
