Reduce Teenage Car Accidents by Choosing the Right Car by Brittanieholderness

For most teenagers, getting a car of their own signals the start of their independence and could symbolize their readiness to take on the roads of adulthood. But to many parents, handing over a set of car keys to their child is probably one of the most exciting and terrifying things they'll ever do.

According to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, teenagers have the worst driving records on the road, accounting for nearly 100 deaths weekly. Analyses from numerous highway safety programs reveal that inexperience is one of the leading causes of road accidents. Teenagers are 10 times more likely to be in auto crashes than adult drivers because they have not yet gone through situations like driving in adverse weather conditions, nighttime driving, and being victims of road rage.

Every parent would naturally want to keep their child safe at all times despite not being there to guide them. The best you can do is to buy your child the safest vehicle in the block. While doing so may not totally prevent accidents from happening, it's the best countermeasure to decrease the likelihood of a road fatality.

When it comes to buying vehicles for teenagers, size does matter. Michael Smith, a research psychologist who works for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, says: "the heavier the vehicle, the better". He adds, "When two things run into each other, the heaviest wins." It all boils down to physics, and this observation is apparently plausible.

Cars are an integral part of everyday Indianapolis life. Most residents rely heavily on private transportation, and only 2 percent of the city's population use public transportation systems. One can say that the number of cars in the city is directly proportional to the number of possible road accidents. So if you have no intentions of watching your child turn into a statistic, look for the safest cars for sale in Indianapolis today and consider it a worthwhile investment.

Other than safety, take into account the vehicle's price tag. Since your teenager is still a relatively inexperienced driver, the prospect of wrecking an unnecessarily expensive new car is indeed heartbreaking. Consider giving him or her used cars Indianapolis Indiana dealerships offer to avoid wasting any money.

Teenagers tend to base their choice on a car's capacity for speed—which is the main ingredient for road mishaps. So when buying a used cars for sale in Indianapolis, have the final say in the matter instead of letting your child have his or her way.
