In the United States, millions of law suits are filed. Amongst them, the majority falls in the category of injury cases that usually lead to huge cash settlements. Moreover, strict laws and regulations have been formulated in the recent years to keep a hold on the liberty of the ordinary citizens from harming one another. In fact, the primary purpose of personal injury laws is to safeguard and at the same time promote remedial measures for consumers and commoners from falling prey to the negligence of corporations, individuals and governments.

The suits that are usually filed under the personal injury laws are related to slanders, libels and even malicious prosecutions. Moreover, there are several causes giving rise to personal injury cases. Road or traffic accidents are common among them. Besides, accidents and mishaps also take place at several work places where employees get injured and even killed. Such cases are usually settled on the basis of huge lump sums. In fact, the cases that involve industrial diseases and defective products are usually settled through big cash amounts. Workers affected by mesothelioma and asbestosis usually file personal injury law cases.

As a matter of fact, several personal injury law controversies have popped up owing to these large cash settlements. Since these cash settlements are awarded occasionally in personal injury suits, people consider it a controversial aspect in the list of legal proceedings. Rather, some prefer to follow the tort laws to restrict such payments.

There are some who opine that personal injury laws permitting compensatory awards as well as settlements related to punitive damage can bring alarming effects on businesses. This can rather get the legal system clogged if individuals start filing such frivolous suits for financial gain. Apart from cash settlements, change in party behaviors which are however effectively liable under such laws are also counted in the list of common effects under personal injury laws.

On the other hand, if you are planning to get your dream car out of its "lemon" state, it's advisable to take help of a lemon law attorney.
