Having seen the benefits of a packing plan, one may get the feeling that their role of assisting their moving services provider is done. However, the packing plan is the first step. In the second step, one has to physically ensure that the articles being moved are loaded correctly in the transport vehicle. This attention to detail is to ensure that the unloading process when you arrive at your new office or home is just as efficient and smooth an experience. Given below are some useful tips that are guaranteed to keep the stress levels at a minimum.

The bulky, heavy articles are the ones that should be loaded first, ensuring that they are propped up securely against the wall of the cab. This also has the benefit of reducing the risk of shifting and movement en-route, while keeping the bulk and mass centered. They can also be used to protect lighter articles that are stored next to them. Lengthy items such as sofa-beds, mattresses, dressing tables, mirrors, etc. must be carefully placed against the sides of the cab and tied down securely. Mattress protectors or old bed sheets can be used to protect them while in transit.

The boxed items are what should go in next. Stack the heavier boxes along the floor while the boxes on top could be progressively higher. But make sure that the stack does not go higher than required, for they could crush and damage the articles stored underneath. Such a packing method often leads to the creation of nooks and crannies. These should not be seen as waste or dead space. Instead they can be utilized in a creative manner by using them to store articles that are lighter or of non-standard sizes. These could include domestic knick-knacks and other odd sized items.

All packaging materials, needed during the move are provided by them, and they even guide clients to their BoxShop, should they wish to purchase more materials as per their specific needs.
