Vehicle Maintenance: the Responsibility of Every Vehicle Owner by Tari Ledsome

Article published on March 26th 2012 | Business

Regular maintenance keeps vehicles at optimum driving levels and should never be set aside at all costs. Simply put, timely and adequate vehicle maintenance helps prevent more costly and complicated repairs while ensuring passenger safety and prolonging the life of the vehicle.

Every vehicle is unique. Manufacturers come up with maintenance schedules and service intervals for specific vehicles. That being said, not everyone understands the value of maintenance; therefore, the real problem lies in remembering when to have them.

Using the vehicle on a regular basis causes wear and tear to its parts. If left unattended, the car could break down, or worse, get into an accident. Brake failure, in particular, is a leading cause of fatal collisions, especially when you're driving at top speed on a slippery road.

The golden rule of car maintenance is to be aware of basic upkeep. Just because there's a nearby auto repair shop doesn't mean you should be complacent. If you're not consistent with vehicle maintenance, you can never tell when your car is likely to break down in the middle of nowhere. Without basic knowledge, you'll be left standing and gaping until help arrives.

For instance, every car owner should ensure regular maintenance of the tires and engine oil. Tires add traction, braking, and steering, while supporting the car's weight at rest or in motion. Auto mechanics advise owners to rotate their tires roughly every 6,000 miles to extend their longevity as well as to maintain proper tire pressure. You can also find an Indianapolis used car dealer and ask for used parts because these usually have a lower price tag.

Oil changes, on the other hand, can make a significant difference on the engine's performance. Oil reduces friction by increasing lubrication in the engine, prevents it from overheating, and removes impurities. At an average cost of $50, oil changes are rather affordable to most car owners. If you want to bargain for the price or throw in additional work, just ask your Indianapolis used car dealer.

Now that you're familiar with the golden rule of car maintenance, the next step is to find a reputable mechanic or dealer who can help you fulfill your car owner duties. Dealerships are often the best choice for the job due to their extensive experience and overall knowledge of a variety of car models. In addition, they provide excellent service, from Indianapolis used car sales to automotive repair and maintenance.
