Article published on February 1st 2012 | Career

While looking out for a career, among the trades that you may find appealing is that of a locksmith, the others in that group being the electrician, mechanic and plumber. There are several reasons why you may want to become a locksmith. The main reason is that a locksmith's™ job has virtually no limit to the earning potential. However, skill, concentration, creativity and patience are the traits that must be inherent in you.

You can quite easily be a freelancer and have your own private business. There are adequate openings in both the domestic and commercial markets as well. Once you have trained to become a locksmith you will enjoy a very stable career since the demand for locksmith services is on an exponential curve due to increased security considerations. Today the latest locks are those that have electrical options. Your field as a locksmith is therefore vast with a large number of specialist areas of work.

One of the best jobs of a locksmith is that of a mobile locksmith who is available on call. You could also be an investigational forensic locksmith. You may like to specialise in one of the skills such as that of a car lock specialist or a specialist in master key systems. You could also be a specialist in safes. As a locksmith you could be a security consultant and with the large variety of locks you will probably be a Security Specialist.

Locksmith training courses are run by the British Locksmiths Institute (BLI) that is a part of the Master Locksmiths Association (MLA). These qualifications are recognised throughout the industry as well as the police and the Association of British Insurers and the Home Office.

Locksmith courses take anything between nine months and two years to complete. However, in order to evolve and stay abreast of this dynamic field you will need to train continuously throughout your career. You don't™ need to work within a company or an organisation. But, locksmith jobs are available in a locksmith company or shop, a security manufacturer and hardware or DIY stores. Shoe repairers and the larger department stores also have key cutting services and these do employ locksmiths.
