Henri Lloyd clothing, one of the leaders in creating menswear which is fashion forward and fit for purpose, has done it again with its latest Blue Eco collection, a unique range of clothing made from recycled polyester fabric – making the company the first in the world to try out this new innovative way of producing clothing. Don't be fooled into thinking this is a phase or a one off – the company plans to use this method of recycling clothing indefinitely, and we're looking forward to seeing the results.

The Henri Lloyd brand has a long tradition of producing menswear clothing that uses the latest available technology to ensure its customers get the best out of the brand. From innovative waterproofing to more functional additions to their clothes, one thing that can't be argued with is that it's always done in style. The brand may have started by making clothes designed for wear for sailing and yachting but its development into a leading fashion brand has only strengthened its appeal. So many other companies have tried to capture the Henri Lloyd image of nautical looks and fresh sporty styles but none of them can compare to this fantastic British power house.

Henri Lloyd clothing has some big things lined up for this summer, proving to be a big year with the launch of Blue Eco, and from what we've seen from the SS12 menswear collection so far, we know you're going to be impressed. Hot favourites from the collection include on-trend rolled up style chinos teamed with deck shoes and chunky knits and tailored shorts with smart blazers. The whole line is a great interpretation of –preppy cool– featuring sharp styles in a range of seaside inspired colours – think blues, neutrals and whites for the season ahead. The styles are easily wearable and can be worn during the day for cocktails by the sea or dressed up for the evening. All you need to complete the look is a pair of sunglasses and you'll be good to go.

The brand is also launching its new season collection of jackets and outerwear featuring waterproof windbreaker jackets in some great colours as well as cool denim pieces to ensure you is covered no matter what the weather. Whilst we're crossing our fingers for a fantastic British summer, it's nice to know that Henri Lloyd has covered all bases and whether you'll be setting sail or staying on dry land, there's a look and a style for all.

With the Olympics and the Queen's Diamond Jubilee on the horizon this summer, there's no better time to stay in Britain, or pay a visit from overseas, and with a great British brand like Henri Lloyd clothing providing this summer's best looks, you're guaranteed a fun and stylish time whilst you're here.
