Write a Critique Term Paper by James Anderson

Article published on January 7th 2012 | College

Critique writing is far different from usual traditional writing styles and for a student it is very essential to understand what a critique paper really is. If you are asked to write a critique paper do not need to hesitate its simple means is to analyze and evaluate not just summarize a certain topic. Although writing a critique term paper can give you a hard time because it is not the presentation of personal expression but needs a thorough research of the topic you have picked. A critique paper is rather an essay or an article that criticizes a literary or other work like movie. It highlights weaknesses and strong sides of the object you are analyzing. The most essential thing is your evaluation must be honest and unbiased and also supported by valid arguments and proofs. This type of evaluation paper answers some questions like how, why and how well and critique doesn't mean to project only negative aspects of an object but it involves both positive and negative and its interpretation as you see it. The first step is to select a piece of work to assess it might be a book, article or movie, writer of an evaluation paper should try to reach the main objective of author and his or her point of view, the discussion must be initialized from the purpose of the author that why he chose or raised a certain opinion. Try to identify author's audience, his arguments and evidence he cited and also try to find out any biasness and assumptions that a writer has produced in his work.

The assessment of writer's ideas and thoughts is the next step in this kind of writing, you have to critically observe that whether the arguments provided are logical or facts are accurate or not. You can check the authenticity of facts and evidence and also their authenticity. When you start this kind of paper, you require to introduce the topic in the first paragraph, then state the thesis and design a plot for the summary. A writer should give the clue to his readers that what this paper is all about. The introduction also includes the back ground of the creative piece that you are going to critique. If critique work is about a book then the writer need to give a brief back ground of author and then to state the author's main idea of work. A movie introduction includes information about the director, its basic theme and names of main actors; if it is an adaptation of any novel a writer should include some information regarding the writer of that novel and its theme.

In the second phase of assessment writer should emphasis on the main body of paper which involves a lot of details like introduction of characters and their settings. Identify the author's main points and evaluate them whether the evidence are supporting author's arguments. A writer must break down the paper into different segments according to different parts of book or movie; this way would facilitate the writer to deal with different parts of book separately. If a writer gives real example from the piece of work he is using, it will strengthen his arguments. By evaluating all negative and positive aspects and answering all questions rose during evaluation, its conclusion would be complete and comprehensive and if a writer incorporate all mentioned processes the critique work would be inclusive and realistic.
