The Effectiveness of Security Systems by Fernando Severns

Article published on April 17th 2012 | Computer

Security systems redefine the phrase “keeping an eye on you” in a literal way. While you are out at work or school, cameras, sensors, and alarms will be your house sitters for almost the entire day. They have an impressive track record of getting the faces of the culprits and bringing them to justice.

Security is as old as the human race itself; but it was more flesh and bone than state-of-the-art electronics back then. Palace guards routinely patrolled the palace grounds for signs of intruders or acts of mischief. As time passed, security systems were in the works “ from simple strings and cans to alarms enough to drive you nuts. Perhaps a look at some cases can help you get an idea on how effective security systems are.

James Bulger murder case: Many British knew what happened to James Bulger, a two-year-old boy who was killed in 1993 by two 10-year-old delinquents. It was significant in a way that the crime prompted a debate on how to handle minors as criminals. A closed-circuit television (CCTV) camera managed to get a clear shot of Bulger’s killers in a shopping mall.

A week after the murder and the release of the CCTV footage, the two delinquents were arrested and found guilty of abduction and murder. As the “eyes” of a building, a security camera can take a shot of suspicious people and keep them preserved for later review. This is one of the many instances security cameras helped solve one of the most infamous criminal cases in the history of the U.K.

Long Island’s burglary problem: Police recently cuffed four burglars after responding to a burglar alarm that went off in Suffolk County in Long Island. The arrest of the group ended its streak of burglaries across the town. In cases like these, security systems Long Island homes have literally “cry for help.” The home’s occupants may be away, but God help burglars if the sound of the alarm reaches the neighbors.

Alone, these nifty security gadgets can tell a burglar that the jig is up. However, put these things together and you get a system that can virtually make your home or office thief-proof. Security systems integration may be costly; but would you rather let burglars get away with your money than invest in it?

Ask providers of security systems Long Island has to offer for more info on how cameras and alarms can protect your place. Also visit online news sites for more cases of these gadgets busting attempts of theft and uncovering murder mysteries.
