P J Mechanical Corp. was founded in 1971 with the aim to serve the New York real estate industry with its construction, installation service and maintenance of HVAC systems. The company was founded by Peter J Pappas to provide the finest air conditioning installation and service available. The company is now one of the top most New York City HVAC mechanical contractors.

It assists with renovation of existing structures and also with construction of new ones. P J Mechanical Corp. has always emphasized energy-efficient HVAC operation. P J Mechanical Corp. designs and engineers Green projects and has received LEED Silver Certification and Gold Certification for its energy efficiency.

Over the years, the firm has added to its list of clients with its excellent services. The firm provides sophisticated air conditioning and heating systems, and these systems are highly efficient and eco-friendly as well. They have also met LEED standards in a data center project for Moody's Corporation at the new World Trade Center Site. Another main project that P J Mechanical Corp. is working on is a $14 million endeavor for the Bank of America Corporation office tower. In this project, they will be installing a sophisticated under-floor air distribution system using the most advanced energy-saving technology. Other popular eco-friendly projects the firm is working on include Citigroup Inc, WNYC, and Yankee Stadium.

To ensure that the clients get best service, the company has in-house insulation experts who perform various checks and inspections, such as ensuring if the ductwork, pumps, and HVAC units are insulated in a proper manner and the fiber-glass material used is of the highest quality.

The firm owns a fleet of 80 fully equipped vans and a highly trained staff which ensures that every client's expectations are met and the project is completed within the deadlines. To know more about the company, please browse through <http://pjmechanical.com/>.
