Prepare Your Social Media Portfolio for Private School Admissions by Julia Bennet

Article published on January 16th 2012 | Education

The use of social media doesn't belong any more exclusively to the area of entertainment or the computer technology. If used wisely and in an innovative way, the new 2.0 tools could be turned into various opportunities to reach the youngsters interested in private school admissions or charter school admissions.

Internet is crucial in winning the hearts and minds of parents and young children preparing for the careful process of private school admissions. Of course, the same can be said about the charter school admissions where, even though public money is available, attracting private funding is important for a long-term and sustainable development. Thus, thinking out-of-the box, both in the case of private school admissions as well as the charter school admissions is fundamental.

Nowadays, many schools are provided with a minimum Internet presence, but in many cases this is not enough. For the private school admissions, the children, together with their parents, will need fresh and updated information and creative ideas for being convinced that the choice to spend the most important of their formative years is worth the investment.

Your approach as to bettering the numbers of both private school admissions and charter school admissions should be focused on providing valuable resources and personalized content. For instance, create constant Twitter update of the blog posts hosted on the main site. Before the scheduled private school admissions, invite former pupils to contribute with blog posts or interviews distributed on YouTube where the prospective students can discover lively events from the history of the school.

Submit different posts and add to your podcasts on a daily basis so as to offer good insights into the life in the classrooms. As for charter school admissions, the presence of local personalities as well as well-known past pupils may be an encouragement for both donors as well as parents that are involved in enrolling their children in prestigious institutions. Break down the information into readable eBooks or freely downloadable slideshares so that your visitors can go through it on similar websites.

In both cases of private school admissions and charter school admissions, create an account with a photo website say Flickr, and keep posting pictures from several ceremonies that happen. It certainly would go down well with the community of pupils and teachers. The plan of tapping social media and its resources is quite important and should be used in an innovative way, luring their attention.

Being connected and part of the network aren't vague words and by using them you will guarantee successful private school admissions. The same can be said about the charter school admissions.
