A popular kind of game among these days Internet Game players is the bubble shooter genre. Bubble games are a really simple type of game but this doesn't stop millions of people all over the world playing some of the best ones every single day.

The typical idea behind many bubble type games is truly simple, a bundle of colored bubbles are in a group, and the player will usually have some manner of firing one bubble at a time into the primary group, with the goal being to match a specific number of the same color (usually 3 or more). Most of the time the main group of bubbles spans the width of the screen, one or two rows to start with at the top of the screen, and gradually coming down towards the bottom with more rows. The players job is to shoot and match groups of bubbles quick enough to get rid of the nearing group of bubbles.

That is the usual bubble shooter game but as with any sort of style of game various different alternatives have been created, and some games that star bubbles do so in an entirely different and original way. One example of such a unique game is Bubble Trouble, presenting a duck and Big Bouncing bubbles that have to be split down to destruction. It is a truly cool and fun game and really it is a bubble shooter game (because you have to shoot bubbles) but for a regular bubble game fan, it will be completely foreign territory.

Some of the more standard variations include a center of the screen group of bubbles instead of the falling rows, and another cool game that has spawned a genre all of its own is Zuma games. Essentially the original Zuma game is a variant of the classic bubble shooter game, after all the aim of the game is to match sets of jewels, the jewels travel round in a growing circle but essentially the core principles have been built of the bubble game style.

One thing that most of the best bubble games have in common is the wide spread popularity they gather. Because they are simple and quick many people use these games to pass 5 or 10 minutes of time perhaps during a break at work or something. With cool high score contests and other social elements tied in to many of the best gaming sites it is easy to see why people come back to play their favorite bubble game over and over again. Bubble shooter games truly are a simple yet highly addictive genre of Online games.
