Arranging for Home Care in CT by Lisa Kelvin

Article published on May 10th 2012 | Family

When you need home care in CT, you are more than likely recovering from a medical issue or transitioning into a different phase in your life. This means that you have done a lot of thinking (or the person who arranged for the CT home care has considered the options) and seen the "big picture". This is an interesting point to consider because a lot of people do look at that big picture and fail to see exactly what they need.

Here is what we mean: you decide it is time to hire some home care in CT, or your physician insists that you investigate this option. You take a few mental steps back and consider your life, and the quality of your life. You see that the doctor is right and that it is going to be necessary to have help with hygiene and some issues within your home. Have you also considered therapy and regular doctor visits? These two things are a facet of CT home care that even the most open minded people fail to consider.

Fortunately, there are options for home care in CT that automatically include an entire team of healthcare providers. For instance, they would sit down with you and your family and discuss everything that you believe you need to begin recovering at home after a medical issue or as you transition into a new phase of life. They let you know that a daily home health aide is a vital part of your new healthcare team, BUT they also point out that you need a regular visit from an Occupational, Physical or Speech therapist too. They might also rely on a team nurse to ensure that you see a physician on a regular basis too.

Does this mean that CT home care services can include "in home" visits from the entire team? Absolutely! If you choose the right home care in CT, you can enjoy a remarkably rapid recovery process, and all without hiring a special vehicle to transport you to a doctor's office or even back to a hospital.

In fact, some CT home care groups pride themselves on the fact that they implement a very valuable "first 14 days" program. This is the period of time after a person is discharged from a hospital or nursing facility in which the greatest amount of recovery will occur. When you work with a group that follows such a program, you are not only getting good home care, you are ensuring the fullest recovery too!
