Choosing Hair Salons in London is difficult with so many choices by Mary Porter

Article published on June 16th 2012 | Fashion

London has long been the world capital for hair salons and the competition has never been stiffer, so choosing the right one for you can be mind boggling. Ever since the 1960s when famous haircuts such as the Bob came into being hair salons London have been at the cutting edge of the industry. The amount of training that is required of the staff is unbelievable and now that so many more services are available on top of the regular hair cut, choosing the right hair salons London is very important to both men and women.

What sorts of services do hair salons London offer?

Obviously first and foremost, hair salons London should be able to offer you a wide choice of haircuts. Many will do classic hair cuts as well as styles that they have developed themselves. In addition to this they can do colouring, and treatments such as straightening, waving and curling. Fashions come and go and procedures such as extensions still remain very popular with a lot of people. A good stylist should not only be able to give you a good cut and style, but they should also be able to tell you how to maintain it on a daily basis. It's no good if you only look good on the day that you are at the salon.

Where are some good hair salons London?

One way of finding good hair salons London is to ask around your friends and colleagues. Personal recommendations are always good. Try and find places that offer a wide range of services, this shows that they really make an effort to give their customers the best possible service that they can. Check their websites and see if they have good testimonials, they will probably have a social network page, so ones with lots of followers will probably be good. One of the hair salons London that is worth a special mention is called Vison. They have an excellent website at www.visionhair.co.uk, where you can see the broad range of services that they offer as well as plenty of testimonials.
