His report suggest that purchases are at the lowest level in 5 years & also the growth in recent permanent jobs has been tailed off. The report was got more support from RICS, representing surveyors, which shows its members were completing 15.6 sales a year as compared with 25.4 per year at the time of housing-boom peak in May-2007. This means there was a fall of 40 percent and it clearly shows how the market activity has fallen. Furthermore prices keeps on falling last month as 16 percent more respondents reported falls in price rather than rise. The reading is in negative territory since 2010 June.

The recruitment of permanent jobs is also at slow pace, as Manpower (national recruitment firm) reported that private firms continued hiring permanent staff in May 2012 but at slower rate than April. The big companies in London have positive balance with +, on the other hand firms at Wales recorded a negative balance of minus 5. Well there is also rise in permanent jobs in some areas in specific fields, like Midlands among the IT & engineering sectors. Bernard Brown, KPMG partner, reported that permanent jobs are increasing for the fifth consecutive month & there is drop in unemployment. But the truth is different and latest figures highlighted lowest monthly rise since December 2011 showing the uncertainty & cautiousness of many employers while recruiting. Answer of Posen to this sluggish growth should be a new institution, which include lending funds to small & medium scaled firms. He also said that this risky move will provide Â£325 billion to be lent under the current Quantitative Easing, which BOE has restricted to the purchase of Government bonds. While on the other hand QE has criticized by many experts as according to them it failed to boost the lending of bank and confidence. But Posen has suggested that QE has complemented the government financial austerity & prevented a deeper slump in economy. He said that fiscal policy makers can convince the investors that good borrowers will not be short of credit or caught in liquidity, with less cash they can invest in risky assets.
