Locum Tenens Practitioner: Does the Lure of Money Affect the Trend by Sanjay Kumar

Article published on February 15th 2012 | Fitness

For most of the jobs that people take up in today's world, there is a factor of money or salary that comes into the mind. Since people with qualifications can choose to have a certain job, they tend to pick the one that has a better pay when the work profile remains the same. For doctors, the work profile is always the same. They have to provide treatment to the patients who turn up at their doors or in the hospitals in which they work.

In the medical profession, one is required to provide the services, whatever be the place. If this is the scenario, then the factor that is decisive in picking up jobs would be definitely that of pay. For those who have a practice, it might be a good source of income, but if the salaries from the hospitals or health centers are considered, then the money would be a determining force for the people to join.

When the doctors get a good offer from a certain hospital, they might think of changing their base. Locum tenens physicians are able to command a better pay, if they can negotiate properly with the agency that is hiring them. Since there is always a shortage of doctors in almost every place, hospitals are more than glad to have an extra hand to ease the burden of patients. They can get into a better situation if they are able to get a high pay in the contract that is signed with the locum tenens staffing agencies.

Most of the locum jobs are seen in places where doctors are not ready to go usually. In remote places, village areas, inaccessible places, and places that very few medical personnel normally gravitate to. If someone is ready to reach out to these areas, they can do so by drawing up a contract where many clauses can be finalised according to their criteria. People can get the company or the hospital to bear their travelling expenses. Accommodation and food facilities can be arranged at the expense of the hospital. Above that, the doctors can ask for a higher salary than what is the usual rate. Negotiations can be done properly so that everyone is satisfied.

People in the area will be now able to get a doctor in their vicinity and therefore they come down for personal treatments. This will add to the practice of the doctor due to which the concept of locum tenens is considered as lucrative. Sometimes there are other issues due to which the doctors have to leave their regular jobs. Due to medical leave, boredom or other similar reasons, people will be out of their regular jobs and can make themselves available for locum tenens jobs in hospitals.

For a certain period of time, people can go to some other place and do so by seeking a better pay. Specialists who are interested for such jobs can also try and find such agencies that put out a better contract on the doctor's salaries. Although professional ethics and other issues are important in the field of medicine, yet getting a better than usual pay will allow people to go for such locum jobs without thinking twice.
