The difference between style and fashion is well known. Style is permanent and fashion is temporary. Fashion is an offshoot of contemporary social trends and changes with each passing age. So it is with tradition and fads. Tradition is perfection distilled through the ages of social custom, and survives each new surge of change. Interpolate these observations to the world of tea, and you can find the links. The traditional way of creating tea from the green leaves is perfection in process, so much so that little has changes over the last hundred and fifty years.

The fruits of modernity have not lent their all pervasive tentacles to the sacred world of classy teas, and thatâ€™s a blessing for the connoisseur of good teas. The art of making tea has remained an art, and has not become an exact science. It is still labour intensive as an industry, and the labour has to be experienced in the best practices, and not anybody who is available for hire.

The precision art of making tea depends on a few time tested processes. Letâ€™s start at the very beginning. A subtle mix of soil, weather and altitude create the best tea plans. The most appreciated fine teas are created from the best tea plants. Out of all the leaves, only a discerning tea planter can pick the best ones, and this selection constitutes the second part of the process of creating fine tea. Once the process of turning the green leaves to tea is done, the tea needs to be packaged immediately. The flavor of tea is crucial and this can only be retained with a sealed packaging that contains the freshness inside. The sealed tea packaging constitutes the third critical stage of the process of creating the best wholesale tea. Next in the process of creating the best bulk tea is the logistics with express delivery guaranteed to the client buying tea.

Any businessman dealing in wholesale teas would know it is a volatile market, and each order for whole sale tea needs to be honored with alacrity. This is only possible with the best logistics employed by the tea company . Like all markets, that of tea is price sensitive, and the best prices are reserved for top tea brands that give value for money. The best tea suppliers like Silverpot always offer this edge to its customers. Since 1879, Silverpot is a leading tea brand offering finest and rare range of Indian teas. The traditional store guarantees of a consistent quality in taste and presents a series of uncompromising choices.

In each of the tea bags that the end user dips in milk, the efforts of thousands have gone in. When retailers buy tea, they are buying hundreds of years of tradition that has emulsified into a culture. The finest tea maker is an artist, and the discerning tea aficionado is an art enthusiast. Next time you buy tea online, or buy tea wholesale, remember that.
