Dental implants NYC are an excellent option for those who have lost teeth or have irreparably damaged ones due to various conditions including periodontal disease.

There are several reasons why people might end up needing dental implants. There are several periodontal diseases that can cause deep rooted and severe damage to the teeth and gums, so that the teeth either fall away or have to be removed for the individual's continuing good health. Many people also lose teeth in accidents, especially falls. Any kind of hurt to the jaw bone or mouth area can end up seriously damaging the teeth.

Earlier on, people with damaged teeth had no option but to go in for dentures. These removable dental fittings were often extremely artificial looking. Even when that was not the case, removing several teeth can cause the jaw area to shrink. This resulted in the dentures users looking much older than their actual years. However with the advent of dental implants, such embarrassment and ugliness are a thing of the past.

So how do dental implants work? Basically, the dental surgeon will be fitting a titanium (some other hardy material) post into the area where a tooth or teeth are missing. Once the post has been fitted a porcelain crown that mimics the appearance of the rest of your teeth is fitted onto it. Dental implants have a very high rate of success and are extremely long lasting and hardy. The post lasts forever while the porcelain cap needs to be changed only after fifteen to twenty years. Best of all, each implant takes the place of an individual tooth, ensuring that there is no more need for the artificial looking and not so hardy bridges that dentists used earlier.

Be warned however that dental implants, especially if you are opting for the procedure in NYC, are quite expensive. However, in most cases of dental implants NYC, the dental clinics will either have in-house financing or will be able to suggest the names of several good outside dental financing firms.

To conclude, many people suffer from absent, damaged or improperly fitting teeth. Since your tooth is something that is instantly visible to anyone you meet, an absent or damaged tooth can be a big source of embarrassment for those who suffer from such a condition. Dental implants ensure that such unnecessary suffering is avoided and the patients can go back to living happy, confident lives.
