Availability of Emergency Dentistry Options by Dr. ArthurA. Kezian DDS

Nobody likes an emergency; there would probably be pain, anxiety, stress and a sense of urgency. There are emergency dentistry needs that a consumer can experience. These could be in the form of intense pain with a tooth; accidents involving the mouth and teeth; chipped and broken tooth; postoperative discomfort. And perhaps it happens when the dental clinics are closed as in after office hours, weekends or public holidays.

Sources

It is indeed very trying on the consumer who experiences a dental emergency. Excruciating toothache is felt with no relief from the normal doses of painkillers. Great discomfort causes the consumer uneasiness in the daily operations.

One can try calling the regular dentist who may be available for an emergency dental treatment if the emergency number has been secured beforehand. Not all dentists offer an emergency number for quick dental relief as many are overworked and want their off days too.

The Internet is a great source to secure one or more emergency dentists around the neighborhood. It may be that the patient may need to make their way to the emergency clinic if house calls are not accepted.

A last resort would be to proceed to the hospital where the doctor in charge would make the necessary calls to the associated dentists if it is an urgent emergency as in the case of an accident.

Special occasions

There may be some odd occasions where an emergency dental treatment may be required such as a chipped or loose tooth before an important occasion like a wedding. It is necessary to call in the dentist to fix the tooth before walking down the aisle.

It could also be an important trip that one has to make over the weekend when some tooth gives trouble. A constantly increasing throbbing sensation that distracts one from rest or concentration on any matter requires an emergency dental treatment to ease the discomfort prior to the trip.

Graduations, company functions and other public appearances are special occasions when one needs some immediate dental attention. Hence, it is always handy to keep the contact number of a dentist who is willing to serve during emergencies. The cost may be higher than normal but the relief is a higher priority.

Traditional methods

There are consumers who would resort to traditional methods of relieving pain than to seek emergency dentistry treatment. Many resort to high dosages of pain killers to relieve the pain or gargle with antiseptic solution hoping to kill off the bacteria. Some resort to pulling their hurting tooth by hook or by crook on their own.
