3D ultrasound is performed to examine the uterus, ovaries cervix and fallopian tubes, making it easy for the gynecologist to diagnose the issues regarding pregnancy. Not only these ultrasounds are helpful in screening ovarian cancer, it can also be used to diagnose internal complications such as formation of fibroids, cysts and unwanted masses. People also approach the obstetricians and go for ultrasounds to detect the reasons for infertility, which has become very common these days. 3D ultrasound Colorado is helpful in other areas of female health too, such as finding the details of pelvic inflammatory disease, and endometriosis. Nowadays with the advancement in technology it is possible to have more clear and vivid images of pelvis, which are very helpful for the experts to discover the causes and nature of such illnesses.

Abnormal pap smears:

In simple terms, pap smears are just the screening tools and currently gynecologists use them to find the presence of abnormal cells in the cervix. In such complications, it is advised that abnormal pap smears Colorado should be conducted at regular intervals which can reduce the risk of harmful developments at a later stage. Early treatment can certainly prevent a lot of complications. That is the reason that experts advise pap smears to be conducted after the age of 20 and as soon as a female becomes sexually active. The detection of pap smears as abnormal indicates that the female has got some infection or abnormal growth of cells, which though is not indicative of cancer, but certainly further testing needs to be done at this stage to have a clear picture of the abnormality.

Treatment for an abnormal Pap smear:

As emphasized earlier, a positive result of abnormal pap smears does not mean the presence of any kind of cancerous situation; however a further examination known as colposcopy is conducted, wherein cervix is examined using microscope. Colposcopy Denver therefore is needed to detect the reason and nature of abnormal formation.
