The weather conditions prevailing in UK are favorable for gardening and planting. English weather makes it possible to grow some of the rarest plants that are not grown easily at other places. But the weather conditions are not always the same. Sometimes it is too much cold or too much rainy. In these situations, gardening is not possible round the year. It becomes hard for the plants to survive in the snow cover in the chilling winters. But some garden lovers have come up with an alternative for this problem as well. Now, one can cherish the pleasure of gardening even in snowy winters inside an orangery.

Orangeries are made by using double glazed glasses that makes it energy efficient. Glazed glasses reduce the amount of heat loss through the walls and also reduce the carbon footprint. This will consequently reduce electricity and gas bills utilized in heating up the rooms in winter. Trees and plants tend to die in winter because of the excess cold that goes beyond their tolerance limit. By moving these plants inside an orangery in winters will protect them against the snow and ice. And the double glazed glass will help in maintaining warmth inside the orangery.

If you live in a place where the weather becomes more extreme, then you will have to follow few more steps to keep you garden live throughout the year. Firstly, the material of the orangery must be chosen accordingly. Suppose if your area have more snow then the material used to build the orangery should be strong enough to face the snow storm and the roofs should be slanting to let the excess snow fall off. Moreover, you can place a radiator or heater in the orangery to provide extra warmth to the plants. Covering the plants with sheets is also a trick used to aid them in survival.

Lastly, you can choose your plants more wisely depending upon the climatic conditions and space available. In case of extremely cold weather one should go for plants that can withstand that kind of weather conditions. But people living in tropical areas can grow plants more liberally.

By following these simple steps and keeping them in mind will let you grow trees all the year round. You can step in your orangery and cherish the aroma of lush green flowers and shrubs any time of the year. If you are a garden lover, and looking for something that will let you cherish your habit throughout the year then you have come to the right place.
