Many homes across America have outdoor areas that can be both aesthetically and practically enhanced by outdoor lighting. Light fixtures that are safe and suitable for use in the great outdoors have evolved far beyond the artful trailing of chains of fairy lights amongst the branches of trees in your garden. Nowadays, you have the luxury of taking your pick from a variety of fixed ceiling lighting fixtures, post lights and outdoor wall sconces that are suitable for use in the open air, besides in temporary or permanent outdoor buildings and shelters.

When considering outdoor lighting, you are readily forgiven for automatically thinking about decking and BBQ areas, garages, gazebos, marquees, sheds and other outbuildings. Of course, you are absolutely correct inasmuch as there are numerous eminently suitable light fixtures and fittings for each and every one of these areas. What you might be forgetting is the very first thing that yourself and your visitors encounter before they even arrive at your front door – your driveway or front path.

You will be amazed at just how many post mounted outdoor light fixtures there are to tempt you. Not only is lighting for the external approach to your home highly practical, it is also an extension of your interior home lighting. Some styles have lanterns hanging from post mounts, whilst others ditch the dangle and have the appearance of burning candlesticks or street lamps. As you would expect, high quality outdoor lighting goes through the most rigorous of safety trials to ensure that it is robust enough to shed illumination in a variety of extreme conditions.

What you start with on your approach, you can elaborate upon in your garden. Outdoor wall sconces are available in matching or similar styles to ranges of post mounted outdoor lighting. Winningly, this not only allows you to use them separately in different outdoor areas, but mix and match them in several.

As for the outdoor buildings and rooms that initially sprung to mind when pondering outdoor lighting, there is far from a shortage of light fixtures tailor made for barns, breezeways, garages, mudrooms, porches and most other places that are external to your house itself. Flush and hanging fixtures fulfill not only the obvious practical purposes of shedding light on to outdoor darkness, they furthermore provide contemporary or rustic lighting ambience befitting of the rest of your premises.
