What is screeding?

Screeding is the process whereby a concrete floor is laid on the ground to give you a strong, durable, level surface. If you have an uneven floor or a new building where a floor is needed, then it is most likely that you will opt for screeding. The existing floor is first prepared so that the concrete can take hold. Then the concrete is poured all over to and levelled out perfectly so that you have a completely even floor. Once this is done then you can consider other options such as resins, sealers or paint coats etc. You could also of course opt for carpeting, wooden floors or tiling. Once the floor has been levelled the world really is your oyster.

Are there different types of screeding compounds?

There are a few different options that you can go for when it comes to screeding. For example you may wish to have a fast drying concrete so that the remaining building work can continue as quickly as possible. We all know that time is money when it comes to building, so this is a very popular option. Another alternative is a very high strength concrete where the floor would be expected to carry a very heavy workload. This would be used in industrial environments such as factories etc. There are also levelling compounds that can help to make sure that the floor is as level as humanly possible.

Where is a good place to go to for screeding?

There are a few good companies that you can go to for screeding. Obviously it is a good idea to shop around as prices and levels of quality can vary quite a bit. One company that stands out above its competitors is called Ultimate Screeding. They have an excellent website at www.ultimatescreeding.co.uk, where you can find out all about them. They have years of experience in screeding and they are able to give you a good variety of choices to suit your own individual needs.
