Termidor - Termite Killer and Protective Barrier by Seth Nyles

Article published on June 19th 2012 | Home Improvement

Termites present one of the biggest insect related threats to one's home. Their colonies can number many thousands of individual insects, each eating their share of the wood that makes up your home. They can cause extensive and expensive damage, often reaching well into the thousands of dollars by the time it is found. Their somewhat reclusive nature also makes it hard for a person to even know they have an infestation until some significant damage has already been done to the wood inside a house or other structure.

Because infestations all begin with a few worker insects scouting out suitable locations with plenty of available wood, it is necessary to use not only a product that will kill the insects that are already inside the house, but also will create an impenetrable barrier to future termite scouts that are looking for a suitable place to make a new branch of their colony. Should they find a house that is not suitably protected by a barrier insecticide, it will not be long before they have established a new nest, and are eating their way through the wood that makes up the structure. Because of the grave threat posed to one's home by these pests, it is important to battle them with the strongest and most effective product available.

The product that best matches these desired qualities is Termidor insecticide. It is produced and sold by BASF, and is the most popular termite control product in the country. It is formulated to be completely odorless and tasteless, so that the insects do not know ahead of time that they are being exposed to it. It also has a slow acting property that is part of the overall strategy to eliminate the entire colony.

Because of its slow action, the insects who eat or otherwise come into contact with it will take it back to their nests and spread it around their cohabitants. This will lead to a much faster collapse of the nest itself, which in turn will give much greater results in the process of eliminating the termites from your home.

When using a product such as Termidor insecticide, it is important to follow the manufacturer's instructions on where and how to apply the product so that it spread evenly around the perimeter of the house, so that all termites who come anywhere near the house will receive a lethal dose of the insecticide.
