The improvement of the standard of living of the people over the years has brought about a significant change in the styling of architecture and interior decoration. The advent of technology has also played a major role in the development of the infrastructure which has been affected by the phenomena of urbanisation too. The aesthetic looks of the surroundings have been a vital concern since then.

The kind of accommodation an individual possesses is counted as a major factor to measure the living conditions and thus the interiors of a house is given considerable importance. This includes the theme selected for the designs, the type of furniture to be bought, the upholstery employed and the different shades of paint in each room. The latest inventions in chemical engineering have led to the development of organic paints which are being environmental-friendly and increase the lifespan too.

The thermilate technology in the category of paints has resulted in major benefits. These thermally insulated paints when applied to the walls or ceilings reduce the heat loss from the walls in cold areas and similarly avoid heat gain through these walls in hot areas. The anti-condensation property of paints equipped with the thermilate technology avoid the condensation of hot vapours on the wall emitted generally in the kitchen which create water droplets and thus wear off the paint and its colour. Thermal insulation is also applied to the floors these days which increase the heating efficiency by reflecting back the heat waves and thus reduces the electricity usage. Thus less heat is absorbed by the floor and thus it acts as an energy saving device.

The efficient coat of paint requires the painter to be equipped with proper paint accessories. The most important of these is considered to be paint roller which is used to smoothen out the paint applied by paint brushes. The painting overalls are worn by the painter to avoid messing up of clothes. These paint accessories also include sand paper to remove stains, ladders to reach out high areas, paint brushes of various sizes depending upon the area to be painted and spray cans which are a latest invention.

With the formulation of various colours, there are thousands of shades of paint available in the market for the customers to choose from. The application of paint exists right from walls to ceilings, furniture to metal and thus is considered to be an important substance.
