Choosing from different ring types by Canberra Marketing

Article published on December 3rd 2011 | Jewelry

Let's try and evaluate the most popular designs available in the wedding rings industry today:

Platinum rings are particularly admired for more than a few reasons. Firstly, the metal is very rigid and strong, imperative for a ring that will be hopefully on your finger for a long time. Platinum is a sensible choice for anyone suffering from skin conditions, as it does not cause allergies. Finally, that fabulous lustre sustains on that wedding ring for a long time. Contrasting to most white gold rings, platinum rings are not plated to achieve that sheen, Titanium rings makes popular selections for those in contact with caustic chemicals or ruthless circumstances i.e. working in hazardous industries. Titanium is also hypoallergenic. Titanium rings are now available in a variety of tints for a contemporary look. Due to the fact that titanium is almost unyielding, resizing of a wedding ring can be a unresolvable issue.

Braided rings appear much similar to Celtic ones. These classics are a great choice for those who are not looking for overly ornate. Braided rings can look splendid in two and three tone metals.

Studded diamond rings - Both brides and grooms are increasingly opting for this choice on their wedding bands. Selections vary from all over pave to channel settings, to wedding rings with a row of diamonds top and bottom leaving the centre of the band free to be plain or worked.

Hammer wedding rings make a great choice for the groom who wants a little visual appeal and texture without too much fussiness. They are also a practical choice for anyone who is likely to save on a few hundred dollars on their wedding ring. A few dents and scratches will be much less apparent on a worked ring such as this. This wedding ring is also available in two tone metals for additional visual appeal.
