Article published on March 20th 2012 | Management

Washington DC is the capital of the United States of America. The capital is named after George Washington, the first president of the United States. Thus, it's only fitting for Washington to be the location of the White House, the traditional residence of the US president. When the president conducts his business meetings, he does it in the Cabinet Room, White House Situation Room and Roosevelt Room.

The president definitely knows the importance of meetings. The rest of corporate America understands this, too. Some studies have shown that the average employee spends as much as 30 percent of his working hours in meetings. This means an average of almost three hours per working day. It is essential that time spent in meetings is time well spent.

Well-organized meetings usually take up less time than disorganized ones. This is true for all types of meetings, whether conducted informally like meetings among friends or formally, like meetings in corporate settings. Less time in meetings translates to more productive hours for employees which translate to more revenue-generating opportunities for the company. Well-organized meetings should therefore reduce opportunity costs for the company.

Meetings that are well-organized strengthen the team. They are opportunities for team members to share information and feedback regarding their companies. Team members can also strengthen their bond and clear issues with each other during meetings. These allow employees to have their voices heard and express their concerns.

The company management also benefits from meetings. Management can address issues affecting the company and its employees through meetings. It can gather creative and innovative ideas from employees they could never have thought up themselves. A Washington DC meeting space is conducive to these types of meetings that result to productive discussions.

Meeting rooms typically consist of a long table in the center of several chairs. The employees sit on the chairs along the length of the long table, while the company management representative sits near the head of the table. White boards or projectors are used to facilitate the flow of ideas in the meeting. A good Washington DC meeting space has modern AV equipment for company meetings and client presentations.

An ideal meeting space is comfortably large and well-ventilated. A Washington DC meeting space has enough area for participants. It is elegantly designed and lighted to encourage a healthy exchange of ideas, and to impress upon employees and management the importance of meetings.
