It is a universal truth that husbands forget the anniversaries and even other dates which seem so much important to you relevant to the relationship. This is not something which they do by design instead they simply cannot help it. Maybe it is their genetic makeup which is responsible or this is simply an ethological trait. Whatever be the reason it is the wives who get all the heartaches. Women set so much importance on anniversaries and not without reasons. It is after all the time to renew the marriage vows and look back on the phase which has been spent together. Man is mortal, and thus every moment which is spent in the company of each other is precious.

The main thing to remember when your husband forgets the anniversary is that do not be angry to the point of being cantankerous. In such a scenario letting momentary surge in hormones ruining it will simply not do. After all we have a tendency to be all humans. Even you'll typically suffer from bouts of forgetfulness. The next step is reminding your spouse what day it is and what it signifies in your lives. This will give him a chance to apologize and make it up to you. Now making up is really quite interesting and many times you will find husbands going out of their way to undo the so called damage. After all desperate times call for desperate measures. There will be flower bouquets galore, last minute bookings at the restaurants or even some music, great food and dance in the quite of the home which is romantic to the utmost. So giving a leeway can sometimes give really rewarding returns.
