Tips for owners of oak worktops by

Article published on June 15th 2012 | Shopping

Oak worktops are versatile products which look at home in all sorts of kitchens. Along with things like mahogany, pine and walnut worktops they are easy on the eye as well as long lasting and hard wearing elements of construction. However if you become one of the many homeowners who invest in oak worktops then there are a few ways in which you can get the most out of your investment. Here are just a few tips for taking care of hardwood counters which you may find useful:

When it comes to oak worktops it really is a matter of common sense. For instance make sure you always use a chopping board. Sometimes it is tempting when you are just chopping herbs or a slice of bread just to do it on the surface but this can cause permanent damage to the likes of oak worktops. Therefore a special board for chopping is needed to sit on top of the worktop in question.

Obviously oak worktops need to be treated. This usually comes in the form of oil which is applied to give the surface in question a protective coating. This can be reapplied at fairly regular intervals “depending on the level of use” to protect the worktop from cosmetic damage from the likes of dirty cutlery and crockery. On the other hand it is sensible to refrain from putting things like hot pans directly on oak worktops when serving up meals as this can cause lasting harm to the wood.

Accidents can happen and things like spillages are inevitable in places where food and drink are being prepared on a regular basis. However, you should always mop up anything that has been spilt immediately and clean the affected area thoroughly with a damp cloth.

Before you worry about how you can take care of oak worktops you need to make sure that you buy something of the very best quality. One company which stocks an extensive range of kitchen materials including oak and walnut worktops can be found at Topworktops.co.uk. If you want oak worktops then the website may interest you
