Exceptional Hardship Due TO Dangerous Driving by Julia Roger

Article published on July 12th 2012 | Society

To tell you truly, there is no particular definition for exceptional hardship. However, many people define Exceptional hardship differently. As per the section 35 of Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988, there would be dismissal of the driving license if within one year a driver accumulates 12 or more penalty points. If the driver is a repeated offender there would be severe punishment. There are few strict circumstances where the severe punishments come into force. This is where the hardship comes into play. Rather to say in this case it can be called as exceptional hardship. In certain severe circumstances, there would be loss of employment for an individual, especially the drivers. This circumstance is also termed as exceptional hardship. This is a hurdle that comes in between the reach point and the individual. The motor lawyers handle the exceptional hardship cases.

The next section of this article deals with the Death by dangerous driving. Dangerous driving is very common phenomenon. This act is most commonly seen among the youngsters. They often forget the proverb "Speed thrills, but kills". Dangerous driving does not only kill the driver but also it kills the pedestrians. Dangerous driving can be the result of many things. One of them is driving under the influence of alcohol. Every year the number of deaths by dangerous driving increases. The accidents are common when you are driving under the influence of alcohol. This time the driver does not have control over him/herself. There is every possibility that he/she will hit someone on the road or hit the car into some tree or street light pole. Ultimately the fatal result would engulf not only the driver but also the people on the road and the near and dear ones back at home.
