Article published on July 20th 2012 | Software

Monitoring and Managing your business brand perception in the online world is now a critical part of business. Customers encounter your brand online. And with the growth of mobile devices, such as smart phones and tablets, this may even happen while they are physically at your business, or in route to see you.

It's important to understand the ways your business reputation is fostered or attacked online. The Web not only makes it easier for customers to learn about your business from content you create, it also allows and fuels anyone with a browser to share their opinion. These online dialogs are a driving factor of what is often referred to as the "social Web," and they have a big impact on your brand reputation.

Monitoring your brand online is getting simpler and simpler by the day. It's becoming clear that hiring a reputation management firm not only is a wasted expense but something your in-house marketing team can do itself if trained in the right tools and methodologies.
