The Toronto Marlies were North Division champions in the 2007- 2008 season and this season; they're off to a good start. With over 20 wins under their belt, they're leading the North Division thus far. The Marlies have a promising season ahead of them, which could be attributed to Mike Zigomanis, the Marlies highest scorer and the league's 12th best scorer.

Many changes have been made to the Marlies roster this past year, only seeming to improve the team's dynamic and their overall standing. At the end of last season, Dave Nonis, General Manager of the Toronto Marlies, announced that the hockey club has added forward Jerry D'Amigo to their roster. Since then, Leafs forwards Matt Frattin, Colton Orr and Joe Colborne, defenceman Korbinian Holzer and goaltender Ben Scrivens were also recently assigned to the Marlies. Coming from other teams are left-wingers Kelsey Wilson, who came from the Milwaukee Admirals and Will Acton, coming from NCAA's Lake Superior State Lakers. Former Marlies defenceman Jake Gardiner and forward Darryl Boyce are both now playing for the Leafs.

“If you want to watch the player destined to markedly improve the Maple Leafs, you might consider heading to the Ricoh Coliseum,” MapleLeafs.com Senior Writer, Mike Ulmer writes. “More than ever the Marlies matter.”

With a constantly changing roster, the Marlies still manage to stay in sync and beat the competition to maintain their first place spot within the division. The Toronto Marlies are currently the only team in the AHL that play in the same city as their affiliate, the Toronto Maple Leafs. With the hockey club consistently announcing team changes, there's no doubt that additional Marlies players will be drafted to the Leafs and more adjustments will be made.
