Cell phones have become an addiction. Once you purchase a cell phone and start using it, you soon realize that it has become old in a few months. Your expectations with your cell phone increase and you look for a new cell phone with better features. There was a time when mobile phones were used just for calling but today they are used for everything except calling you friends. It's not a joke. People use cell phones for surfing internet, they use cell phones for listening songs and they use cell phones for watching movies.

One of the most interesting features of cell phones is that they are used for chatting and sending SMS. Friends chat on cell phones for hours. Whenever a new handset is introduced in the market, young boys and girls sell their cell phones for cash and purchase brand new mobile handset. The use of cell phones changes according to the age groups of people. Younger people take them for entertainment, older people to keep in contact with their children and grand children.

Students love to change their cell phones frequently. Professionals consider their cell phones their status symbol. Mobile handsets are a perfect gift also. If you want to give a lovely gift to your father or son on his birthday, give him a cell phone. The decreasing cost and increasing popularity of cell phones have created a boom in cell phone market.

The demand of cell phones further increased due to people's ability to sell a cell phone. Every day millions of new cell phones are being produced by different cell phone companies around the world. On one hand it is giving employment to millions of people and on the other it is creating environmental havoc. The cell phones which are getting produced every second give rise to unmanageable electronic waste. If the production of cell phones at such a fast pace is not tackled, it will become the biggest problem of future. It doesn't mean that people shouldn't purchase new cell phones.

By becoming a little bit more responsible they can contribute towards the environment and society. If every person, who buys new mobile handset, also sell a cell phone that are used and obsolete, the demand for new cell phones can be regulated. Many online cell phone stores purchase your used and old mobile handsets and give you a good amount against them.
