Widely known for being the final destination for Dr. David Livingstone in his journey to find the source of the Nile River before falling ill in 1873, Zambia is a nation that is chock full of magnificent natural beauty that covers most of the countryside. With awe inspiring waterfalls and a vast array of native wildlife, it can still be easily overlooked when considered for tourist destinations, but upon closer inspection, there is much Zambia has to offer, to people from all around the world.

With its most popular attraction being the Victoria Falls on the Zambia River bordering Zambia and Zimbabwe, the thunder of the water rushing over the cliffs and columns of spray can be seen and heard for miles, rising from these massive waterfalls, which reach a height of more than one hundred meters. Victoria Falls seems to be frozen in time, largely untouched by developers, and surrounded by lush wildlife and the native culture.

When visiting Victoria Falls, there is plenty to do, with sightseeing expeditions that take you in and around the falls, getting a glimpse at this natural wonder in ways you could never imagine, taking you so close that you may need to bring a towel or a change of clothes. You can go swimming right on the edge in one of many natural rock pools, or take to the sky in an aerial tour, and for those that are even more adventurous, you can even bungee jump right over the edge and get a view unlike any other.

During low tides, you can even walk all the way to Livingstone Island, where the good Doctor himself camped when visiting them himself for the first time back in 1851. You can even visit the nearby Mosi O Tunya National Park and get a look at some of the local animal life, including some endangered white rhinos. Here you can take advantage of an open area with no natural predators and get an up-close look at some of the nation's most magnificent creatures in their own habitat.

In order to visit Zambia, travel visas must be applied for in up to 180 days in advance and include a full itinerary with your valid passport and a personal invitation, which can be acquired by reaching out to the Zambian government, and is far more simple than it may sound. As long as all of you don't need to use a US passports renewal service renew a US passport and all other information is in order, you can start planning your trip, and see this magnificent nation for yourself sooner than you think.
