There's one major occasion in life where you want to look like a princess for the day and quite simply it's the day that you become a wife. That being said your choice of Bridal Fabric will play a pivotal part if you want to bring a dream bridal gown to life. Brides tend to spend a great deal of time and effort choosing their Bridal Fabric which is understandable when you consider just what is at stake. They want to look gorgeous as they take those happy steps up the aisle to the altar with their Bridal Fabric swishing behind them. Therefore plenty of thought must go into choosing the Bridal Fabric and it's one of those decisions that can't be taken lightly.

Satin, Silk or synthetic

Probably the hardest decision a bride has to make is the material the Bridal Fabric is made from. Bridal Fabrics made from satin and silk are very popular, they look luxurious and lavish but they can also be prone to creases. This won't matter too much if you are getting married in the UK but what happens if you want to get married abroad how will the Bridal Fabric stay crease-free during its travels? In that scenario it might be better to consider synthetic types of Bridal Fabric that won't tend to crease as much. Seek advice from your wedding dress maker if you are unsure about the crease-resistance of the Bridal Fabric.

How flattering is the Bridal Fabric?

This is your magical day and you want to look totally glam so think carefully about how the Bridal Fabric will look once it has been made up into your dream design. Again satin and silks can look stunning when fashioned into a figure-hugging bridal gown but they will also highlight certain areas of your body. If you are conscious about bums and tums it might be wise to choose a Bridal Fabric that cleverly conceals those problem areas.

Traditional or modern

The style of your wedding gown might help you to choose bridal fabric. If you are opting for a traditional bodice on the dress brocade could be the perfect solution. The again, if you want a super-stylish dress that shimmers and shines as you exchange vows, satin would be the ideal choice.

At the end of the day it's your decision when you pick the perfect Bridal Fabric and there are many factors that could sway your opinion. It's best to cover all options when choosing Bridal Fabrics so sit down and talk about your gown with your dress designer and together you can formulate the dream design.
