A wedding without background music cannot be imagined. Among the different important arrangements that are needed to be made for a wedding, choosing the right musician is one that needs to be carefully considered. Music adds the emotional element to the event. Moreover, the music being played at the reception will also depict your personal style. Different kinds of music can be selected to be played during different ceremonies of the wedding like a soft romantic music to be played before, during and right after the wedding ceremony and entertaining music to be played during reception which can make people to dance and enjoy the party.

Here are some steps that will help you to choose the perfect music for your special day:

â€¢ Discuss with your partner: The best way to start with is to discuss with your partner what kind of music he or she likes. A kind of music that suits the personalities of the wedding couple should be chosen. Nowadays, people are organizing music bands consisting of a wedding saxophonist, guitarist, harpist, string quartets, pianist and singers to make the whole group of performers. All the group members blend their art with each other to make a pleasant melody. So you donâ€™t have to look for all the specialists separately.

â€¢ Do it in advance: You know the importance of background music in your wedding ceremony and you would not like to ruin it by making any decisions in haste selecting dissatisfactory music players. This can make you regret for your lifetime. So start your search as soon as possible. You can start your search on internet where you might look for the musicians providing services near to your place.

â€¢ Mark out the options: Select a few of the available options and find out their reputation, number of members, how much they charge, how much experience they have and liability insurance if they have any. Take the feedback from their previous clients about their performance. Find out if they have any additional costs for meals, travelling to your place and overtime if required.

â€¢ Visit websites: Once you select a band of musicians for your wedding, visit their website as some may have uploaded demo videos and audios of their previous performances. Check the kind of instruments they have, their technique and their style.

â€¢ Provide the information: The next step is to select songs of your choice to be played at the event. Make a list of them and let the musicians know about it. Supply them with all the information regarding the wedding date, the venue, timings, etc. to make sure that they come well before the arrival of the guests to make settings according to their comfort level. Also keep a copy of all the details given to them and those provided by them like the fee, insurance, their contact information and number of members to come.

Apart from the usual instrument players like the pianist and the guitarist, a unique instrumentalist like a wedding saxophonist can add a twist to the wedding music. This can make your wedding extraordinary and unforgettable for everyone attending the event.
