Comprehensive Guide to Striking a Pre Owned Car Deal by Nathan Brown T

Article published on March 8th 2012 | Writing

If you cannot afford a new car then buying a pre owned car is the best thing you can do. So companies will even allow a car loan on it although the buyer may be expected to bring in a bigger than usual margin. Buying a new car is tricky business unless it is straight and forward like Xfinity Deals. You will need to do a lot of wrangling over the price, taxes and even the expenses over giving the car a makeover. If you have a trusted garage owner whom you can trust then striking a deal over a used car can be easy. He or she should be able to give you a fairly correct idea what the car may be in its present condition. Normally car owners want to sell off their cars for two reasons: either it has been too old to maintain it efficiently or the owner wants something new. If the present owner is selling for the second reason then you can expect your purchase to give sufficiently long service. If you are about to purchase a pre owned car consider applying some of the ideas below. You could possibly save a lot, and that should be enough to give your buy enough money for a makeover.

The first thing you need to do is know the local value of the car. Make your own judgment and don't try to use the quoted price as the bench mark for making an appraisal. Sellers always try to get the best price for their car and very definitely quote at least 30 to 40% more than its fair value. They will even tell you that the price is not negotiable. But let that not deter you from making an offer that you think is right. Sellers will always find a good reason to sell it off at the slightest tip that you are ready to clinch a deal. If you can manage, keep the middlemen away. It is all for your advantage. Remember that middlemen often collide with sellers when dealing in cars.

When you plan to make a pre owned car deal don't hesitate to have a look at the odometer, but don't upon the information you see there to strike a deal. It is not uncommon for dishonest car owners to manipulate it to their advantage. Look at the tire conditions and the upholstery. They can give you all the clue to how much the car has been used. However there isn't much you need to look at the manufacture year. You can find that out from the registration certificate. How often and where the car has been running is also an important factor that you cannot lose sight off. Cars that have run in the coastal regions can possibly have a corroded under part. So examine it a little deeper before settling for a deal.

Look for tell tale signs point to a collision. A car that has collided head on stands little chance of giving you good service however well it has been refurbished. It is almost impossible to turn it back to the factory condition. If the service records of the car are available it should be reassuring to you about any major overhauling it has undergone. If the car still has its original painting then that is sign that it has never been through a major accident and that should be good reason to clinch a deal. Finally see if the car has ever been mortgaged, and if it has been, then get all the documents to prove that the car is free from encumbrances.
