Watch batteries are those tiny silver colored button cells that seem to go on and on. A typical watch battery runs for at least 5 years if not more. They are named button cells because of their resemblance with buttons on clothes. Button cells are not only used in watches but also in hearing aids, pocket calculators and other small electronic devices. It is very important to dispose these batteries once they are through with their life. A used watch battery buyer is the perfect guy to call in such a case. Professional watch battery buyers can be found all over the country and all you need to do is call them up to get rid of your used button cells.

Watch battery buyers are part of a global business that has become rather lucrative now. Every country in the world has more than one used watch battery buyer and they specialize in safely recycling these batteries.

The problem with watch batteries is that they contain some very harmful chemicals that pollute the environment. They are high on mercury, lithium and cadmium. Although the modern watch batteries have much lower amounts of mercury in them, batteries made before 2004 had considerable mercury content. Mercury can seep into the groundwater level and contaminate the drinking water. Lithium is highly corrosive and is a major cause for lung diseases. Cadmium is a heavy metal and can cause cancer. Although the content of these metals in these batteries is very small, thousands of such watch batteries accumulate a sizeable amount. So, you see, not disposing watch batteries can cause multiple problems for you as well as for the environment.

Look for a used watch battery buyer and you will most of them with their online presence. Once you find information about the way they work you just need to call one of the watch battery buyers and they will set things in motion. They will ship to you specialized containers in which you are supposed to put the watch batteries, seal the container and send it back to them. Depending on the weight of the batteries you send they will pay you a pre-agreed upon amount. Most of them pay you as per the price of silver on the day. And these watch battery buyers offer you free shipping if the total weight of the batteries exceeds a certain amount. So, you can run a neighborhood campaign where you collect used watch batteries from your neighbors and ship them to these watch battery buyers. The money earned can be used for some community work.

These days we tend to use many electronic gadgets and button cells are used in most of them. Stop throwing the used watch batteries here and there and instead use the expertise of a used watch battery buyer. Watch battery buyers have an excellent system in place to get rid of these batteries and recycle them to extract metals. As far as you are concerned, you will be proud to say that you are a responsible citizen.
