In this world, where personal independence and the desire to become successful at all costs has become the greatest obsession of people, finding true and unconditional love is nothing less than a dream. Irrespective of that, every year the hopes of millions of people across the globe about meeting their soul mate are revived through the celebration of the spirit of love on valentine day. Not surprisingly most men see chinese women partners on this special day with the hope of finding their perfect life mate in the ladies that personify femininity.

Sadly, in most western cultures the true spirit of valentine day has been lost in the brilliance and dazzle of money and fame. So, while people, who claim to be in love with each other, are ready to shower their partners with expensive gifts and gadgets, they rarely find time to share their joys and sorrows with each other. However, Chinese women still believe in the concept of love forever and consider the companionship of their partner on this special day to be their most valuable gift. They still like to do things for their partners to make them feel happy and wanted and would rather spend the day with their partner rather than party with friends and acquaintances.

For most Chinese women, looking after the needs of their partners is the best way of expressing their love. While they are not averse to achieving professional success and personal growth, they surely would not like to obtain these at the cost of ignoring their partners. In fact, it is quite common for Chinese females to give up their flourishing careers to take care of their partner as well as his home and family. For a majority of western men this is the true spirit of Valentine day, which the Chinese females celebrate everyday in their life. It is also one of the major reasons for attracting western men towards these oriental beauties in such large numbers.
