Roofing as a profession, is an extremely tough and hard job and requires high levels of physical strength and determination when one is on the job. It is very important that a roofer is physically fit , and is not afraid of heights since the job basically deals with being placed on heights and repairing and installing roofs. The person indulging in a roofing job should be strong, and healthy and must have the ability of working extremely long hours at a stretch since many activities during the roofing process cannot be left incomplete and must be finished once started else the roof may collapse etc.

Thus, they must have the ability to keep at the job for several hours at a time without a break. Roofers are strongly advised to wear clothing and apparel such as helmets and goggles etc to protect them from the climate, since they are working under the open sky and to save them from injuries and burns etc.

A roofer is first of all required to gain on the job training before indulging in the roofing process themselves. It is important that they get such training so that they see the process being carried out first hand and can practice it also while under supervision. They must also be well acquainted with all the different kinds of materials used in the roofing process and the various techniques that can be implied while roofing someone's house or a building etc. It is also very necessary that they know how to handle and manage various types of equipment such s as ladders and scaffoldings which are required to each up to the roof, and other such equipment such as drill machines and blades etc which are often needed during the roofing procedures.

There are roofers available everywhere, and the profession is not really affected by the situation in the economy since even if there is a period of recession, people still require roofers to repair and maintain their roofs. Indianapolis roofers and Detroit roofers are some examples of roofers existing and working in various countries and pars of the world. The job is overall quite famous and many people take up this profession simply because they are interested in how roofs work etc, or they tend to be the adventurous sort who like trying out new activities and don't mind being at heights etc.

However, on the other hand, most people find the job of roofing quite difficult and strenuous and complain of it being an extremely tiring job. The profession is seen as one that pays well, and thus one never runs out of a job since there is always the need of a roofer experienced somewhere or the other, specifically with the amount of mishaps happening currently due to collapses of buildings etc.
