College is hard to handle as it is. You barely get time to self-study, never mind late night parties and sleeping sufficiently. In college, you can't have it all-good grades and enough sleep will leave you socially inept; partying hard and sleeping won't give you time to study; and if you choose to concentrate on the other two sacrificing your bed time, you can't survive even if you're superhuman.

And it just gets worse when you happen to fall sick- you'll be burdened with a truck load of backlogs leaving you craving for some breathing time. So is there any way to cope up with the college blues? There are dozens of ways to help you survive and make it out of college with a degree in hand and one of them is e-learning. E-learning includes all forms of teaching methods that use electronic assistance. But this article will mainly concentrate on learning and self study ways on the Internet.

When you miss important class lectures and presentations, isn't it a pain to approach your professors and ask their help in teaching or even clearing up your doubts in the missed out portions? Professors being very busy creatures are hardly available after class hours and you can you ever see them in their cabins? Here is where online tutorials come into play.

Ten years back, who would have thought that teaching stuff through a computer as possible? Luckily, cutting classes are no longer a problem as far as worrying about missed out portions is concerned. Currently, there are plenty of online softwares and sites that conduct online classes. You can have a personal tutor teach you the subject of your preference online at your convenience and availability. This can be done on a virtual white board or specially designed teaching software. And with a faster Internet connection you can even see the person teaching you via video calling options.

Video calling has definitely enhanced the online learning domain. With the increasing availability of Faster Internet connections there is the opportunity for students to learn a variety of subjects in an atmosphere similar to a virtual classroom. Teachers are able to conduct classes not just to one but over 10 or more students. Besides, online tutoring is a lot less expensive than hiring a personal tutor to come teach you at home. Not just that, online tutors are able to offer quality and individual time to clear your doubts and easily use other methods of e-learning such as videos, audio books etc., to make the learning process more fun and invigorative.

Online learning wants to be your miracle worker even if you're not up for spending some cash on missed out portions. Apart from online tutoring, there are a myriad of ways and means to get rid of that log jam. Top Ivy League universities have made their libraries function online for the access of the general public. There are free Internet archives with resources on practically everything available at your service. These sites are especially helpful for scoring an A on your assignments as they contain wonderful books and lectures that you may use to add some extra info.

The Internet being a ginormous resource base has self-study material in formats besides the ones present in text. You can learn from audio books too. Audio books are a less-tasking way to stuff your lessons inside your head. It's always refreshing to hear someone read out the chapters for you, almost like listening to a story and the best part is there are very few chances of memory repression.

In the past few years, online learning has seen tremendous improvements. Education professionals are now posting their lectures as videos in free sites like YouTube enabling students to enhance their understanding on different subjects. There are colleges that host open ware course sites where you can find lectures from senior faculty members in the text, video and audio formats for free.

Honestly, these websites are modern marvels.

With online learning, you can even learn new courses, earn degrees and so on. All you need is a good computer fitted with video and audio equipment a cheap internet connection like faster internet and youâ€™re all set to enjoy the comforts of online learning.
