The official language of Spanish is Castilian. Known in Spain as the el español or el castellano, it is one beautiful language with no barriers. Spoken by more than four million people all over the world, the language is developed from Latin. An official language for more than 21 countries, the language has a wide array of authenticities. Considered as the true language of Spain, the language contains a beautiful essence of its own.

The Spanish in Spain has its own charm, with the language taught to each Spaniard in school. Every Spaniard will learn Castilian, as it is the first thing taught in Spanish school in Spain. Considered to be one of the ancient, yet pure forms of the language, Castilian remains beautiful to be heard even today. Many people still consider the language as the true descendent.

When we think of Spain, proud, gallant, passionate and patriotism is what comes in mind. Spaniards even resorts to animated gesticulations when they have to emphasize a point, a happy-go-lucky race by nature, Castilian is not the only language spoken by the Spanish people. It is their official language, but as all other languages present in the world, they have multifaceted dialects that is spoken in various regions and areas. If anyone is interested to learn these beautiful dialects or learn Spanish in Spain, they should get in touch with the locals present, as they will be able to clarify the dialects that govern there.

For example, the autonomous Basque area, which is the northern area of Spain, the locals prefer themselves to be referred as the Basques rather than Spanish or Spaniards. The dialect of Spanish that is prevalent there is Euskera. In 1982, it was given the status of being the official language of the area. There are also many sub dialects of the Euskera. To study these sub dialects, one may have to join the Spanish Courses in Spain. The dialects are also taught in the schools that are present in the area of Basque.

Euskera is also one of the ancient languages. Many philologists believe that the language expired in the era of early middle ages. Although, some argue that the language persisted in this area. It is completely different than the Spanish that most people are familiar with; however, the language is also spoken in the French Pyrenees, where a large number of people settled from Basque.

To study Spanish in Spain, it is not so difficult. There is another language called Catalan that is a form of the Spanish languages. Spoken throughout the country, the language Catalan was first discovered and identified in Catalunya, Valencia and in the Balearic islands. There is the also the local fusion version of Catalan and Castilian. The Catalan language has also spread sporadically in parts of Italy and in Andorra. The language is taught in various Catalan schools.

Spanish is one of those beautiful languages that require the schooling, learning, and training. It is beautiful, growing, romantic, and exotic.
