Past few years have been a blissful phase for filmmakers across the globe. No matter which part of the world you reside in, chances are you might have heard about black movies. There has been drastic in the way movies were made a few years ago and what we see now.

Most of the black movies produced in the beginning were race centered films. That was way back to the twentieth century. While producing such movies, the only factor to be considered was the black audience. These films spoke volumes black people. The sole motto of filmmakers was to create an accurate portrayal of the most discriminated section as compared to what we see in early white movies - black people. And, the most famous producer of black movies was Oscar Micheaux. However changing times proved a boon for all.

Although African people residing in the United States are free, there are many states, most them located within the South United States continued to discriminate people on the basis color. They not only treated blacks as second citizens but also misbehaved with them. It might be interesting to know that Jim Crow laws were introduced in various southern US states with the implied intention to maintain whites separate from black folks. In simpler terms, both segments of the population, whites and blacks, were compelled to drink water from different water taps and attend separate faculties amongst many others. This inequality was challenged by Rosa Parks who refused to give up her seat to a white. This incident took place in Montgomery, Alabama in 1955. And, it was the beginning of the civil rights movement which brought a drastic change in the lives of blacks in United States. Many films were produced on this particular incident.

Many African American Movies were produced that narrated the experiences of black folks living in the United Kingdom. These movies chronicled the pain and heat of discrimination that blacks have suffered for a very long time. One such movie was Roots that garnered appreciation from all walks of life. This movie was one of its first kinds of miniseries that recorded highest-rated points in the history of television network. This movie went on to win a few Peabody Awards and Golden Globes along with nine Emmy awards to its kitty.

However, present day movies are more fun to watch. They are beyond the realms of pain and discrimination. Furthermore, a good number of blacks are working. If you want to buy African American DVDs then there is no need to rush from pillar to post as there are various online portals catering to your needs. From hilarious comedies to intense drama, you will find it all with just a few clicks.
