It ranks second in the largest places of Andalusia and has around 550000 habitants. The city lies on the southern side of Alicante besides the Costa Del Sol. Tourists cross Malaga in ruder to have a pleasant stay at the splendid hotels and resorts in this beautiful place. The place is known for wonderful wines and also raisins. So if you happen to visit this place donâ€™t forget to buy some these specialties to take back home.

There are many sightseeing places worth visiting in Malaga. The harbor to begin with is very intricately constructed and will leave you mesmerized. Another place of visit is the cathedral of Malaga with a peculiar construction style. Itâ€™s built of limestone and was built in 1528 by two people namely Diego Siloe and Pedro Lopez. The buildingâ€™s construction work has not yet been completed and is standing on a mosque. The construction activities were hindered mainly due to financial crisis and still it is incomplete. Spain people call the building as manquita meaning missing relating to the tower which is still not finished in the cathedral.

As over a period of many years several portions have been completed step by step so we find a wide variation in the construction pattern. There is also a market in the midst of all these buildings in Malaga. It has some local specialties on offer which you could try out. Even the local food delicacies of the traditional style will be available in many of the restaurants close to the market.

Picasa museum is yet another place that should not be missed. Itâ€™s the house where the legend was born and so all his famous works will be put on display. This house has been dedicated to the foundation Picasso. The person and his history could be studied here in his place of birth.

The harbor is something that will leave you relaxed. There is a park very near to it which has some nice places to sit and enjoy the natural beauty. You could take your family for a picnic to this park and spend some enjoyable moments there. Very near to it is the Malaga Castle built in the model of roman fortress. Though most of the portion of the castle is in ruins but there are two museums that are still preserved. You will get a glimpse of the gothic culture and Greek traditions from the articles displayed in the museum.
