K1 visa allows the fiance of an American citizen to travel to the US with the intention to marry and reside with his or her US citizen fiance. Upon entry to the US, fiance visa holders have 90 days in which to marry their US citizen petitioner and apply for permanent residence status on the basis of their marriage. If the marriage does not occur, they must return to their home country within the 90 period.

The following are the requirements of a k1 fiance visa:

â€¢ You must be a US citizen

â€¢ You have met your fiance in person within the previous 2 years â€¢ Both you and your fiance are legally and free to marry â€¢ You meet certain minimum income requirements

â€¢ Your fiance does not have a criminal record â€¢ Your fiance will not be a threat to the US law.

K1 visa is a temporary visa to the United States for the sole purpose of getting married within the US. This visa is not a permission to stay in the US for long term. Until the marriage takes place you are considered a non immigrant. You may enter the United States only one time with a K1 visa. If your fiance intends to live and work permanently in the United States, he/she should apply to become a permanent resident after your marriage. Your children who are under 21 years can accompany you via the same petition. The processing time varies from case to case according to its circumstances.
